

FINDING HOME: A Novel

Will Prentice, who immigrated to Canada from England thirty years ago, realizes that sometimes you have to leave home to find it. The week after his wife asks him for a divorce, Will returns to England to attend his mother's funeral. Embarking on a driving tour of the English countryside, in part on a quest to unravel a secret from his mother's past, in part trying to see how much of England he remembers, and where he belongs, he begins to reexamine his life back home in Canada. His driving companion is his uncle's grandson, Fred, a recent Cambridge graduate at a crossroads in his life who is interested in Canadian Studies. As Fred drives Will through various English boroughs, Will talks him through a journey across Canada, from the fishing villages of Labrador to the rainy coasts of British Columbia, reawakening Fred's imagination and defining the heart of his own passion. Eric Wright's portrait of two countries, Britain and Canada, supposedly similar but literally an ocean apart, asserts Canada's uniqueness and reminds us that home is not only geography and landscape, but also a state of mind. Finding Home is a sensitive and optimistic look at Will's search for a new beginning after work and kids that will resonate with anyone who has ever had to face an uncertain future.
