

The Second Promise (Mills & Boon Vintage Superromance)

Promises, promises Maeve Arden had promised to love forever, but the marriage failed. Now, five years later, Maeve has finally found peace—peace she's promised herself to keep. The last thing she wants is a new man in her life. Her joy comes from her work designing landscape gardens. Will Beaumont hires Maeve to design his garden. He, too, isn't looking to have anyone else in his life—no matter how much she attracts him. He's just agreed to a platonic marriage with another woman and it's a promise he intends to keep. But circumstances conspire to remind Will of a second promise he's made. The most important promise of them all
